Activities (What will you and your students do during the lesson to promote learning?)

The teacher will introduce the lesson within the context of Cold War politics and domestic policy in the 1940s and 1950s. The class will review the Smith Act and discuss the perceived need for this law in 1940.

The teacher will review the facts behind the case in Connecticut in which seven Communists were indicted for violating the Smith Act. Students will be divided into two groups to explore the essential question: Were these men a threat to democracy? One side will represent the defense and the other will represent the prosecution. Each group will be charged with identifying the strengths and weaknesses of each side and prepare a closing statement that reveals knowledge of the case and implications for national security and politics. The statements will be read aloud. The class should discuss the essential question to conclude the lesson.
